Executive Committee Chair's Report, 2010–2011

The Yale College Executive Committee has 10 regular voting members: three tenured and three untenured faculty members; three undergraduate students; and the Dean of Yale College or her designee. In addition there are three officers. For the 2010-2011 year these were: the chair, Margaret Clark, Professor of Psychology; the fact-finder, Eric Sargis, Professor of Anthropology; and the secretary, Dean Pamela George, Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs in Yale College.

The Committee hears complaints regarding alleged violations of the undergraduate regulations. (Up to and including the 2010-2011 academic year these included charges of sexual misconduct and harassment. However, the new University Wide Committee on Sexual Misconduct began operation on July 1, 2011 and, going forward, violations of the Undergraduate Regulations involving sexual misconduct or harassment will be heard by that committee.)

The committee saw a total of 146 students in the 2010-2011 academic year. The committee found eleven not to have violated the undergraduate regulations. 135 were deemed to have violated the regulations with the majority of these students acknowledging that that had done so following charges having been made. Of these, 82 students were found to have violated the regulations and received reprimands; 32 students were placed on probation and 21 students were suspended from Yale College. In the 2010-2011 year no student was expelled. 3 students, facing charges that arose late in their senior years, had their degrees briefly withheld until after their cases were adjudicated.

Whereas in past years the Executive Committee met only during the academic year, with charges brought during the final days of the spring semester being held over to the fall, a new policy was introduced during the 2010-2011 year. Following the conclusion of the spring 2011 semester, the committee continued to meet through mid-June of 2011 to hear serious cases that might result in a decision to suspend or expel students. The new extended term policy provides for resolution of serious cases in a timely fashion reducing, we hope, student anxiety and uncertainty. In the 2010-2011 year it also eliminated the problem of having some charged students return to school in the fall and having to leave due to suspensions soon thereafter.

FULL HEARINGS
A “full hearing” of the Committee occurs when a student disputes the validity of a charge made against him or her. These cases involve fact-finding and the convening of the full committee. The student appears before the committee with an advisor of his or her choice. The student and committee receive copies of the charges and of the fact-finding report. Prior to the hearing the student also provides a written statement that is given to the committee. At the start of the hearing, the student is advised of the committee’s procedures, makes an opening statement, and is asked questions by committee members. The student may choose to have his or her advisor speak and most students do make this choice. The student makes a closing statement if he or she wishes to do so and most do. Witnesses may appear, make statements and be asked questions. The student is excused after making concluding comments and the committee deliberates. The committee may either dismiss the charge or impose one of the following penalties on the student: reprimand, probation, suspension (for one or more terms), or expulsion. A suspended student may be required to go through the readmission process before returning to enrollment in Yale College. A degree may be withheld. The group can also place restrictions on students or ask the student to pay for repairs to property that he or she has damaged.
There were four formal hearings during the 2010-2011 year.

Three involved individual students. One student was charged with cheating on a final exam, another was charged with acts of violence, defiance and violating a “no contact” order and a third student was charged with sexual misconduct and harassment and intimidation or coercion.
A final hearing involved charges of harassment, intimidation or coercion of any member of the Yale Community and imperiling the integrity of the University. This charge was brought in connection with the actions of a group of students. A number of students who held formal positions within the group appeared before the committee but the actions of the entire group were considered and both their individual responsibility for the group’s actions and that of the group as a whole was considered.

DISPOSITIONS
Almost all our meetings are “dispositions without a formal hearing.” A student who admits the validity of a charge made against him or her may petition for a disposition without a full hearing and, in 2010-2011, we granted all such petitions. Once the petition is granted, the chair, the fact-finder, the secretary, and one of our three students (who alternate in this role) meet with the charged student or students. This group is called the “Coordinating Group.”

The Coordinating Group met nearly every week in 2010-2011 year to adjudicate 79 cases involving 135 students. Prior to the meetings, all students submitted statements to the coordinating group regarding their actions, all consulted with their chosen advisors (most often their residential college deans but sometimes a master, a coach or a professor) in preparation for this meeting, and often consultations included discussions with Secretary of the Executive Committee.

Later, the students appeared before the coordinating group and the Chair went over basic information regarding confidentiality, confirmed that the student wished to admit the validity of the charge or charges in question, and made sure there are no conflicts of interest. (Conflicts sometimes did exist and there were times members of the coordinating group recused themselves from deliberations and were replaced by others.)

REFERRED CASES

In addition to the cases mentioned above, another 100 cases involving 120 students. These cases almost always involved issues involving alcohol. Students generally received a written reprimand if they were found in possession of alcohol or they received a letter of referral to the residential college dean/master and Health Services, if they were found intoxicated and transported to the hospital.
COMMON TYPES OF CASES AND OUTCOMES
The following section of this report is provided to give the reader a good sense of the types of violations that were seen and adjudicated in the 2010-2011 academic year.

We do not identify students nor make public outcomes of individual cases in ways that would identify the students with one exception. FERPA (The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act) requires the disclosure of decisions to victims of certain crimes/violations of our rules. In cases covered by this act we do disclose the outcome of our hearings and dispositions to the victim(s). In one case in the 2010-2011 year all victims of a group’s actions could not be identified and sanctions relating to the group were publicly announced. This is an unusual circumstance.

If a student is reprimanded, it is part of their internal record. If they are ever asked if they’ve been disciplined at Yale, they are free to say they have not been. A dean or master is allowed to say the same. If a student is placed on probation, suspended or expelled, the sanction is part of their external record. If they are ever asked if they’ve been disciplined at Yale, they must answer truthfully and say that they have been. A master or dean is required to explain the nature of the offense.

CHEATING AND PLAGIARISM BY INDIVIDUALS OR PAIRS OF STUDENTS
Fifty-three (53) students were charged with cheating which resulted in 13 suspensions, 17 probations, 13 reprimands, 6 instances of the charges being withdrawn and 3 cases which were carried over to the fall term. (Cases may be carried over to the fall term if they occur late in the spring semester (for instance during final exams). One (1) additional case is pending and will be adjudicated if and when the involved student returns to Yale.

Twenty-seven (27) of these cases involved plagiarism. The nature of plagiarism varied widely.
In some cases a paper or lab report written by someone else was turned in as the student’s own work. In many cases students “cut and pasted” material found via the internet and some of these cases were a small portion of a paper or the majority of a final paper or exam. Many students failed to provide proper citations for material used or to place quotation marks around direct quotations. Students also turned in papers done for prior classes as “new” work done for current courses.
It is noteworthy that many students claimed not to have understood what constitutes plagiarism. Claims of not knowing what constitutes plagiarism do not mitigate charges of plagiarism. The committee urges all students to carefully read the Undergraduate Regulations regarding plagiarism and consult the faculty and writing tutors if they have any questions whatsoever regarding plagiarism. It is especially important to take note of rules regarding quotations, citations, and properly crediting others for their ideas. So too are students advised that it is not permissible to take others’ ideas and to paraphrase them without giving the source of the idea credit through direct acknowledgement of the source in the text of the paper and, always, proper citations to the original source.

Some students were charged and found guilty of plagiarism in early drafts of assignments turned in for comments to teaching fellows or professors and some of these students expressed surprise regarding the charges. Students are responsible for academic integrity at all stages of their academic work.

Cheating took the form of submissions of the same work (and, in one case, work done in high school) as new work, collaboration on take-home exams, copying answers from other students, referring to notes or electronic devices during exams and claiming to have taken an exam that had not been taken. Collaborating on problem sets that faculty members had stated should be completed independently was a particularly common form of cheating.

VIOLATIONS OF UNDERGRADUATE REGULATIONS INVOLVING ORGANIZED GROUPS: RECRUITING, INITIATING AND “CELEBRATING” NEW GROUP MEMBERS
In 2010-2011, as in prior years, a large number of students appeared before the committee as a result of individual actions taken in the context groups selecting, initiating or “bonding” with new or potential members of organized groups. Often these actions occurred in conjunction with the consumption of alcohol. Very often members of the groups informed the committee that their actions were the result of their following “traditions” that clearly violated Undergraduate Regulations, sometimes causing harm to others, and to property belonging to Yale, and often disrupting of others’ lives. The violations included trespassing, destruction of property, theft, breaking and entering, serving alcohol to minors, requiring alcohol consumption by others, minors procuring alcohol, harassment (including sexual harassment), coercion and intimidation of others, and hazing. The consequences of these actions ranged from relatively minor to very serious psychological harm to others and, in several cases, threats to others’ lives.
The committee took these actions very seriously. Students initiating new students into a groups as well as students being initiated into groups are advised that they are personally responsible for their individual behaviors and that they are required to follow laws as well as the Yale College regulations. Leaders and members of groups (including singing groups, fraternities and sororities, senior societies and other societies alike) and aspiring members of groups are advised to consider carefully the legality and morality of their actions well before undertaking initiations; to make conscious, deliberate decisions as to whether they wish to be involved in such activities and to consider the power that social groups can exert over members and aspiring members of groups. Just because something is labeled as a tradition does not mean it should be followed. Many groups would be well advised to change traditions; all groups would be well advised to consider the perspective of potential initiates, others at Yale, and the welfare of Yale College as a whole before taking unwise and, often, illegal actions.
In the 2010-2011 academic year 36 individual students appeared before the committee for such actions. (The numbers are likely slightly higher as the committee does not always know the social context in which violations of Undergraduate Regulations have taken place.)

In 4 cases charges were withdrawn. Twenty-two (22) cases resulted in reprimands, 6 cases resulted in students being placed on probation and 4 cases resulted in suspensions from Yale College.

OTHER TYPES OF CASES
A variety of other types of violations, mostly involving individuals occurred with sufficient frequency to be worthy of note.

Falsification of documents and emails: A number of students falsified documents such as forms used to request the use of Yale facilities and dean’s excuses. Others engaged in identity theft by sending out mass emails to panlists or to all students in the college under the name of a professor, administrator or staff member at Yale.

Use of drugs and alcohol: Many students violated drug and alcohol laws and the Undergraduate Regulations primarily through the illegal use of substances and, in one case, by distributing drugs. All students are expected to obey the law as well as Undergraduate Regulations in this regard.

Unruly and destructive behavior when intoxicated: When under the influence of alcohol students engaged in a number of unruly and harmful behaviors including getting into physical fights, destroying property, trespassing and defying authorities such as the Yale police, the New Haven police and members of the administration. It is important for students to note that not only do such behaviors violate the Undergraduate Regulations but also those regulations specifically state that being under the influence of alcohol or other drugs is never considered a mitigating circumstance and may be considered an exacerbating circumstance by the committee. 6
A note of caution in interpreting specific charges and sanctions: A list of charges and associated sanctions appear along with this report. It is important to note that charges that may appear similar when briefly described, in fact, may be quite different. For instance, plagiarizing may involve copying a single sentence from a source or turning in a complete paper written by another person. Harassment takes many forms. Moreover, in determining sanctions the committee takes into account the student’s past disciplinary record and a second offense for an action is likely to elicit larger sanction than a first offense. Differences in the magnitude of offenses and in disciplinary histories do influence the nature of the sanctions.
THANK YOU’S

The chair of the committee expresses thanks to all members of the 2010-2011 Executive Committee. Their service in the 2010-2011 year included hearings demanding many hours of their time and ones that typically extended late into the evening. In one case committee members convened for a lengthy hearing after the spring term had ended. Some members made lengthy (and unexpected) trips back to campus to participate. Special thanks are extended to Dean Joseph Gordon, Yale College Dean Mary Miller, Susan Sawyer, Esq., and Dr. Lorraine Siggins. Each provided extensive counsel and assistance to the committee while simultaneously being careful to respect the committee’s independence.

I thank Dean Pamela Schirmeister who stepped in as Fact Finder for a difficult case in which the regular fact finder had declared a conflict of interest.

I thank the residential college deans, the masters, coaches, professors and members of the professional staff who accompanied students to dispositions, advised students before, during and after hearings and waited with students during the committee deliberations in order to be with those students when they heard the decisions. Most especially I thank the Secretary of the committee, Dean Pamela George, and the Fact Finder of the committee, Professor Eric Sargis, who worked harder and longer than anyone else, taking great care to team with others and to make the best decisions possible in cases that, in 2010-2011, were often very difficult and complex.
